How do you start a revolution with a laptop? The film profiles three women who use social media to speak out against government oppression and who have been censored in their respective countries.

Yoani Sánchez in Cuba, Farnaz Seifi in Iran and Zeng Jinyan in China have all reported on human rights violations and all have suffered violence, persecution, and even exile. Social media has given them, and others like them, new outlets to be heard. The voices of the women are heard in their own languages with English subtitles. The Cuban blogger Yoani Sánchez receives a particularly powerful profile. A winner of Human Rights prizes globally.
