More Love Letters

It started by accident. In October 2010 on a NY City subway, Hannah Brencher '09 began writing letters to individuals who seemed like they could use a boost, much like herself. She left them all over the city, then began blogging about it and her inbox filled with letter requests from around the world. "In the span of nine months, I wrote and mailed over 400 love letters to people in need and the process healed me," she explains on her site www.moreloveletters.com.

In August 2011 her venture was mentioned in a Wall Street Journal article. Today, More Love Letters

(MLL) has a dozen volunteer letter writers, a social media intern, a "stationery scouter" and liaison who reads and sorts all the letter requests with Hannah. Among the writers are Marie Torto '10 and Kerry Devito '11. "It is a combination of kindness and a unique opportunity," she said. "... to be able to be a source of light, be it anonymous or not, to someone during a really tough time, to be called upon when someone can't find the words for someone they love greatly, I think that is a really huge honor."

MLL has much growing to do, Hannah insists. She quit her full-time job to pursue MLL, hoping to add campus chapters and a kids' program. MLL has also teamed with Cards for Hospitalized Kids (with St. Jude Hospital) to enhance a curriculum for elementary school children. In addition Hannah has done speaking engagements and letter writing workshops. She's amazed by the opportunities. "It's really exciting because I see how much business can be generated from the concept and I have an amazing chance to infuse blessing and value into the lives and companies I interact with."

Hannah plans to continue speaking about MLL and write a book about it. "I am really passionate about the platform that is building itself beneath me," she explains, "This is a chance to be a millennial advocating for meaningful interactions and healthy forms of connection in this digital age. This experience has radically reshaped my life. The emails I've received - those requesting love letters - convinced me the world needs so much more of this."

Hannah returned to campus in November and spoke at Campus Ministry's START2 Retreat. Assumption plans to establish a MLL campus chapter in 2013.
